INTRODUCTION

Just mentioning the word growth generates multiple images in the minds of business people: development, progress, improvement, revenues, profits, accelerating performance. In a highly competitive society, growth is synonymous with survival. And yet, while the meaning of the word may be obvious to business people, the strategies that sales executives use in pursuing growth vary significantly.

When Sales Effectiveness, Inc. decided to conduct this growth and sales excellence study, we were driven by a variety of interests. As professionals dedicated to helping organizations grow, we wanted to learn which growth initiatives are being emphasized by Vice Presidents of Sales today, and the best practices that support those initiatives. Specifically, we wanted to:

- Understand the priority that senior sales VPs give to various strategies around growth
- Understand how well sales best practices are being employed
- Prioritize the challenges sales VPs and their organizations are facing
- Suggest areas executives should focus on in growing their sales teams and driving consistent results

This study encompasses organizations who collectively represent sales forces of over 14,000 inside and outside sales people. The sales forces range in size from 10 salespeople to nearly 1,000, with an average of 157 outside sales professionals. From technology to pharmaceuticals, and from construction to financial services, industries are represented across the board. For this study, we interviewed VPs of Sales exclusively, as it was their perspective we wanted to obtain.

This report is organized into four sections. Each section provides data on how the VPs responded, followed by a few observations:

1. Growth Strategies highlights where Sales VPs are applying emphasis today.
2. Best Practices rates those areas VPs consider important in building a systematic approach to Sales Excellence, and their own opinions on how well their organizations are doing in each of 18 Best Practice Areas.
3. Challenges lists the top challenges Sales VPs are experiencing today.
4. What to Take Away presents steps you and your company can take to keep moving the growth curve forward and raising the bar on sales effectiveness.

We trust the ideas represented in this study will motivate you to reflect and think on how you compare to other sales organizations, as well as challenge you to act on your approach to Growth and Sales Excellence.

SECTION 1: GROWTH STRATEGIES

Study participants were asked to indicate the level of emphasis they are applying to 18 distinct growth strategies. They ranked their degree of emphasis as either “High Emphasis,” “Medium Emphasis” or “Low Emphasis.” The Growth Strategies below are ranked in descending order of participants who said they were placing “High” emphasis on the strategy. How does this compare to your areas of emphasis?

GROWTH STRATEGIES	LEVEL OF EMPHASIS
	High	Medium	Low
How much emphasis are you placing on:
1. Enhancing CUSTOMER RETENTION	84%	16%	0%
2. Establishing methods for KEY ACCOUNT PENETRATION	64%	20%	16%
3. Expanding MARKET SHARE	64%	12%	24%
4. Enhancing the SKILLS of the sales force	56%	40%	4%
5. Upgrading and STRENGTHENING SALES MANAGEMENT capabilities (with salespeople)	56%	20%	24%
6. Introducing HIGHER-VALUE PRODUCTS and SERVICES	52%	44%	4%
7. Aligning your PRICING to the “value” you offer	44%	44%	12%
8. RE-ENGINEERING THE SALES PROCESS to improve how well you sell	42%	38%	21%
9. Developing unique solutions for each MARKET SEGMENT you serve	36%	60%	4%
10. Investing in and using TOOLS AND TECHNOLOGY to increase sales productivity	32%	40%	28%
11. Developing ALLIANCES and STRATEGIC PARTNERS	32%	32%	36%
12. Improving how you RECRUIT and SELECT your salespeople	28%	40%	32%
13. Redesigning COMPENSATION and INCENTIVE plans	20%	32%	48%
14. RESTRUCTURING or RESIZING the selling organization	16%	28%	56%
15. ACQUIRING competitors or new lines of business	14%	36%	50%
16. Expanding GLOBALLY	9%	27%	64%
17. Improving DISTRIBUTION and CHANNELS	9%	41%	50%
18. OUTSOURCING components of your sales force	8%	12%	80%

KEY OBSERVATIONS – GROWTH STRATEGIES

- ◆ The two strategies receiving the highest emphasis, “Enhancing CUSTOMER RETENTION”, and “Establishing methods for KEY ACCOUNT PENETRATION” focus on retaining and growing business with existing customers. Compared to previous research efforts where new account growth has taken the top spot, the shift is clear. Losing existing customers significantly impacts the top line, and exploding growth within an account is essential to long term success. While these two strategies received “High” emphasis, VPs affirm that there is plenty of opportunity to improve the tactics and methods on getting there.
- ◆ While “Enhancing the SKILLS of the sales force” has always been a strategy applied by sales executives, we are beginning to see a change in focus, with the equally high emphasis being placed on “Upgrading and STRENGTHENING SALES MANAGEMENT capabilities.” Research has now conclusively shown that more than anything else, the manager is the key to sales team and individual excellence. It is how he/she recruits, coaches, develops, challenges and builds a motivating environment that catalyzes growth. While cost reduction efforts in the past resulted in greater span of control for the sales manager, the VPs in this study report that, on average, the sales manager to outside sales person ratio stands at 10.4 to 1 today.
- ◆ “Redesigning COMPENSATION and INCENTIVE PLANS,” a common strategy of Sales VPs, scored relatively low in emphasis. This could be a function of the higher income levels VPs report their outside salespeople earn. For the salespeople represented by these VPs, 74% report annual earnings averaging between $60,000 - $100,000, with most confirming it is in the higher range of the band. 22% earned on average over $100,000, and 4% earned less than $60,000.
- ◆ A surprise for this study was the relatively low level of emphasis (28%) being applied to “Improving how you RECRUIT and SELECT your salespeople.” While other sections of the study affirm the importance VPs place on having the right talent, this lower level of emphasis may be a function of turnover being experienced. 54% of the VPs report that their sales forces experience less than 10% turnover a year, 21% reported 10-20% turnover, and 25% reported having more than 20% churn in their sales organization.
- ◆ Considering the level of investment sales organizations have made in the past in the use of Tools and Technology, less “High” emphasis is being placed there today (32%). Conversations with Sales VPs confirm that while components of technology have certainly improved speed, expanded capability and knowledge sharing, they understand that technology is an enabler, not a creator of growth.

TOP PRIORITY FOR NEXT 12 MONTHS

As a wrap-up to this section, participants were asked to share with us any additional strategies they were using that were not part of the 18 strategies above, and indicate the growth strategy that was going to be their #1 priority for the next 12 months.

The answer more people gave as their #1 Growth Strategy was “Expanding MARKET SHARE,” followed by “Enhancing CUSTOMER RETENTION” and “Establishing methods for KEY ACCOUNT PENETRATION.”

GROWTH STRATEGIES	% VPs Rating This Strategy as Their Top Priority
Expanding MARKET SHARE	36%
Enhancing CUSTOMER RETENTION	13%
Establishing methods for KEY ACCOUNT PENETRATION	12%
Developing ALLIANCES and STRATEGIC PARTNERS	8%
Enhancing the SKILLS of the sales force	5%
Developing unique solutions for each MARKET SEGMENT you serve	5%
Investing in and using TOOLS AND TECHNOLOGY to increase sales productivity	4%
Introducing HIGHER-VALUE PRODUCTS and SERVICES	4%
Improving PROFITABILITY	4%
Communicating a clear ROI	4%
Improving the RETENTION of the sales force	4%

Section 2: BEST PRACTICES – HOW IMPORTANT IS THIS?

The survey then explored the extent to which Sales Vice Presidents are investing effort in developing selected “Best Practices.” The Sales VPs were given a list of Best Practices, and were asked to respond on the importance of each Best Practice on a scale of “High,” “Medium,” or “Low.” The following chart shows the importance VPs placed on each Best Practice, listed in descending order for “High” importance.

BEST PRACTICES	How Important is This?
	High	Medium	Low
1. Salespeople knowing your points of DIFFERENTIATION	92%	4%	4%
2. Understanding the COMPETITION	80%	16%	4%
3. Salespeople’s ability to APPLY your PRODUCTS and SERVICES	75%	25%	0%
4. RECRUITING and SELECTING the type of salesperson you need	72%	16%	12%
5. Ability to focus on BIG ACCOUNT deals and opportunities	72%	20%	8%
6. Having a DOCUMENTED SALES PROCESS that outlines THE WAY YOU SELL	68%	20%	12%
7. FORECASTING their pipeline	68%	24%	8%
8. Sales managers COACHING their salespeople	68%	28%	4%
9. TRAINING and DEVELOPING your salespeople	64%	28%	8%
10. Salespeople being able define their HIGHEST POTENTIAL PROSPECTS	64%	28%	8%
11. Marketing team generating QUALIFIED LEADS	63%	21%	17%
12. Salespeople understanding the BUSINESS ISSUES your customers are experiencing	63%	29%	8%
13. SALES SUPPORT team helping the sales force spend more time with customers	58%	29%	13%
14. Their competency in using TECHNOLOGY	54%	42%	4%
15. TRAINING and DEVELOPING your sales managers	52%	36%	12%
16. Defining and executing on TERRITORY GROWTH PLANS	52%	32%	16%
17. Conducting FORMAL BUSINESS REVIEWS to enhance retention of your BEST customers	50%	38%	13%
18. Conducting WIN/LOSS reviews to learn where to improve	33%	38%	29%

BEST PRACTICES – HOW WELL ARE YOU PERFORMING?

We then asked the VPs to rate how well their teams are currently performing in each of the same Best Practices, using a scale of “Superior,” “Average” or “Weak.” Their responses are shown below, sorted in the same order as on the previous list to enable side-by-side comparison.

BEST PRACTICES	How Well Are You Performing?
	Superior	Average	Weak
1. Salespeople knowing your points of DIFFERENTIATION	38%	38%	25%
2. Understanding the COMPETITION	50%	29%	21%
3. Salespeople’s ability to APPLY your PRODUCTS and SERVICES	38%	63%	0%
4. RECRUITING and SELECTING the type of salesperson you need	13%	63%	25%
5. Ability to focus on BIG ACCOUNT deals and opportunities	33%	54%	13%
6. Having a DOCUMENTED SALES PROCESS that outlines THE WAY YOU SELL	17%	46%	38%
7. FORECASTING their pipeline	38%	46%	17%
8. Sales managers COACHING their salespeople	29%	33%	38%
9. TRAINING and DEVELOPING your salespeople	17%	58%	25%
10. Salespeople being able define their HIGHEST POTENTIAL PROSPECTS	21%	46%	33%
11. Marketing team generating QUALIFIED LEADS	17%	38%	46%
12. Salespeople understanding the BUSINESS ISSUES your customers are experiencing	25%	50%	25%
13. SALES SUPPORT team helping the sales force spend more time with customers	33%	42%	25%
14. Their competency in using TECHNOLOGY	38%	46%	17%
15. TRAINING and DEVELOPING your sales managers	17%	54%	29%
16. Defining and executing on TERRITORY GROWTH PLANS	21%	46%	33%
17. Conducting FORMAL BUSINESS REVIEWS to enhance retention of your BEST customers	13%	50%	38%
18. Conducting WIN/LOSS reviews to learn where to improve	17%	25%	58%

KEY OBSERVATIONS – BEST PRACTICES

- ◆ When comparing importance and level of performance, it is clear that these sales VPs recognize that there is opportunity for improvement in many areas, as no Best Practice received a rating of greater than 50% in “superior” performance.
- ◆ 92% of sales VPs rated “Salespeople knowing your points of DIFFERENTIATION” as a highly important Best Practice. Since so much in sales has become commodity-like today, it is understandable how articulating a company’s unique value proposition is essential in securing a customer’s attention.
- ◆ The practice that 50% of Sales VP’s deem as being performed in a superior way is “Understanding the COMPETITION.” Nevertheless, 21% still felt their teams were weak in this practice.
- ◆ 68% believe that “Having a DOCUMENTED SALES PROCESS that outlines the way you sell” is a highly important practice, yet only 17% feel they are doing a superior job there. The opportunity to get serious about this Best Practice is strong. Without a documented sales process as a roadmap, executives have to depend on the creativity, work ethic and luck of individual sales people and their managers to generate growth.

It is important to note the key message of this finding. Given that consistent double-digit sales growth is a desirable goal for many, sales forces must avoid any extraneous sales effort on wasted activity. Establishing a documented sales process, and executing effectively against it, represents a significant opportunity for differentiation and growth.

- ◆ 52% of VPs felt that “Defining and executing on TERRITORY GROWTH PLANS” and “Conducting FORMAL BUSINESS REVIEWS” were of high importance. This is surprising as these two strategies have indeed been proven to accelerate sales growth more than most other sales tactics. Territory Growth Plans and Business Reviews are at the root of Customer Retention and Key Account penetration initiatives, two growth strategies already highlighted as priorities.
- ◆ 29% of VPs felt their sales managers were doing a superior job in Coaching, with 38% acknowledging weakness in this area.
- ◆ 58% of Sales VPs said they are weak in “Conducting WIN/LOSS Reviews to learn where to improve.” Interestingly, many organizations that are considered “World Class” pay particular attention to this area. Since sales organizations today are able to conduct on-line briefings reasonably economically, it would seem that this is an area that could be exploited. Too often we find that sales organizations accept peripheral high-level views of why a sale was won or lost, instead of digging deep to assess the root cause as a basis for learning.

SECTION 3: CHALLENGES

The last part of the survey asked the Sales VPs to list the top three challenges they face as senior leaders. Most executives readily listed their challenges, covering a wide variety of issues. Their responses were categorized into logical groupings. The chart below highlights how frequently the statements were made and a sampling of their abbreviated comments.

SECTION 4: WHAT TO TAKE AWAY

When all is said and done, what are the primary ideas to take away from this study? What should you consider and address for your organization?

First, the study validates that expanding MARKET SHARE, enhancing CUSTOMER RETENTION, and establishing methods for KEY ACCOUNT PENETRATION are the top priority growth strategies. It also confirms that the sales force's ability to understand competition, know their points of differentiation, and effectively apply products and services are integral Best Practices. Research and experience suggest that focusing on these practices will have a direct impact on executing the top priority growth strategies.

Second, the study affirms an important point: there is no ONE magic pill. However, it is our conviction that magic does exist if you approach growth and improvement systemically. Magic exists when you consistently raise-the-bar as a leader. Higher results ensue when you aggressively challenge your own assumptions and focus on improving two to three facets of your business each year, and when you make sales excellence a key part of your culture.

For high growth and consistent results to occur, consider the following twelve action items. They are not listed in order of importance. We hope these ideas challenge you to think critically about your business, to be creative in differentiating your organization, to be aggressive in your approaches to growth, and to establish a framework for SALES EXCELLENCE in your organization.

12 ACTION ITEMS TO DRIVE GROWTH AND CONSISTENT RESULTS

1. DEVELOP A DOCUMENTED SALES PROCESS - It is the foundation for continuous improvement, measurement and focus. It is the roadmap and framework for coaching, for creating LIFT with the sales force, and for key account acquisition and growth. Launched and practiced effectively, a process approach to sales will differentiate you from the competition, and it will attract talented sales professionals who want to be a part of your team.

2. CLARIFY YOUR TOP FIVE STRATEGIES FOR GROWTH – Spell out your top five strategies for growth each year. Pursuing too many strategies dilutes focus. Based on the study, “Enhancing Customer Retention,” “Establishing Methods for Key Account Penetration,” and “Expanding Market Share” are critical. In our opinion, these are table stakes. You must do these three. Pick two more from the list of 18, and then execute flawlessly.

3. REPOSITION YOUR SALES FORCE - Focus your sales force on strategies that help improve your customer's business results, whether it be revenue growth, profitability, or productivity. Be aggressive in quantifying the cost of the customer's problems and therefore what it costs them to NOT buy your solution.

4. IMPLEMENT TERRITORY GROWTH PLANNING - Establish accountability and discipline for achieving financial goals through Territory Growth Plans and Key Account Planning practices. Organizations that are rigorous around territory and key account planning and even more rigorous on execution at the territory management level win more often.

5. IMPLEMENT CUSTOMER BUSINESS REVIEWS - Make semi-annual or annual Business Reviews a must for each salesperson's top five customers. Planning for and delivering formal Customer Business Reviews is a proven methodology for customer retention and account penetration. Delivering Business Reviews is the single best strategy to change the customer's perception of your sales force from "vendors" to "advisors." And when you genuinely focus on the customer's business, your presence and influence in the account will grow exponentially.

6. DEFINE SALES MANAGEMENT PRACTICES – Explicitly define the practices you expect of your sales managers. Define expectations for their roles as leaders, recruiters, strategists and coaches rather than glorified salespeople. Choose sales managers not on their selling skills but on their desire to lead, teach and coach. Sales management excellence is essential to a sales team's motivation and success.

7. ESTABLISH METRICS - Create deliberate measures that reflect both historical and leading indicators of performance. The number of measures you select will depend on your business and the level of rigor you need to apply for your sales force. We recommend you establish a minimum of 10 measures for a sales person or a sales team. Metrics should focus in three areas:

- Customer Metrics that reflect the value you deliver to your customer.
- Results Metrics that recap the specific results you expect from a sales professional such as revenue, profit, and market share growth.
- Process Metrics that indicate the quality of execution of the sales process, such as activity measures that reflect territory coverage, or pipeline measures that clearly indicate where opportunities are in the sales cycle.

8. ENHANCE FORECASTING - Establish a forecasting system that looks at the pipeline formally, and that becomes a primary topic of the monthly coaching conversation. Ensure your forecasting method communicates where each opportunity is in the sales process. Pipeline management reminds the salesperson to think as a business person, deliberately driving choices on where to invest time to move opportunities forward.

9. SEGMENT YOUR CUSTOMERS – Build intimacy and depth of experience through customer segmentation. Identify the critical segments for your business and report your data by market segments. Customers can be segmented in many different ways — from similarity of characteristics, account size and industry, to how they make buying decisions. Create in-depth profiles of each segment and manage to the requirements of each segment.

10. DEVELOP SKILLS MASTERY - Be aggressive in developing and training your sales force. The quality of your front-line drives your business. Asking an outside speaker to come in every year to do a seminar doesn't cut it, and "letting them figure it out on their own" leaves too much to chance. Explicitly define the skills and behaviors required to win. Assess your team and all future hires against those skills and behaviors and invest seriously in sales force development. Teach the principles of business issue selling, as opposed to the traditional "how to make a call" workshop. Train, train, and retrain – from product knowledge to key account strategy to management coaching. Investing in sales skills training and sales manager coaching are considered essential by sales organizations that commit to a long-term view.

11. BUILD A BENCH - Actively recruit. Being reactive about finding talent hinders your growth. Seasoned executives affirm they are more constrained by the caliber and action-orientation of their people than they are by capital. The size of your bench should reflect at least the number of people you expect to turn each year. Reducing the effect of turnover is essential to sustaining double-digit growth.

12. ENSURE CUSTOMER FOCUS – Finally, ensure that the voice of the customer permeates everything you do. Conduct Customer Value Analysis annually to determine what customers most value about you, and to see things completely from the customer's perspective. Make listening to the customer, really listening, a core practice. Everyone in the organization needs to connect with the customer.

WHAT TO DO NOW

We hope this study has challenged your thinking and will motivate you to act to enhance your selling systems as a basis for growth.

Specifically, what should you do now?

ONE approach is to rigorously challenge your organization on those Best Practices and action areas that align with your direction. Ask yourself:

- ◆ Where is there real opportunity for improvement in our business?
- ◆ Where will we focus this year and next?
- ◆ What do we need to do to get really serious about our methods and the way we go to market?
- ◆ How do we make Sales Excellence a focal point of our organization?

If in the process of considering these ideas, you desire an outside perspective, or wish to explore how to accelerate growth and build a framework for Sales Excellence in your organization, we welcome your reaching out to us. We can help.

Our best wishes to you.
